Big Data Analytics Symposium - Spring 2026

Analytics Project: YouTube Music Video Popularity Analysis

Team Name: CLAW

Team: Claire · Anusha C (ac12273) · Wilson

Abstract

- Goal: identify which audio and lyrical features predict YouTube music video popularity
- Datasets: YouTube Trending video metrics, Spotify audio feature scores, and Genius song lyrics
- Hadoop MapReduce: profiling, cleaning, and deduplication
- Apache Hive:
  - 78,000+ cleaned Spotify tracks
  - 40,000+ trending YouTube videos
  - 3 millions+ song lyrics
- HiveQL analysis queries questions:
  - What genre is more popular?
  - How do high-energy or high-danceability tracks do in views?
  - How does lyric sentiment affect song views?

Platform(s) where the application runs: Google Dataproc (NYU shared cluster)

Motivation

Who are the users of this analytic?

Music industry analysts, streaming platform engineers, and independent artists.

Who will benefit from this analytic?

Musicians and record labels, YouTube and Spotify, and content creators.

Why is this analytic important?

- Scarcity of cross-platform integration
- Multi-dimensional influencing factors
- Validation with big data technologies

Goodness

What steps were taken to assess the ‘goodness’ of the analytic?

1. Cross-platform consistency check
2. Join sanity check
3. Deduplication audit

Data Sources

Name: YouTube Trending Video Dataset (Kaggle)
Description: Daily snapshots of top trending videos: title, channel, views, likes, comments, trending date
Size: ~40,000 unique video records after cleaning

Name: Spotify Tracks Dataset (maharshipandya, Kaggle)
Description: 114,000 tracks with 20 audio features: danceability, energy, valence, tempo, genre, popularity, and more
Size: 113,999 raw rows → 78,583 unique tracks after MapReduce cleaning

Name: Genius Song Lyrics Corpus (Kaggle / Genius API)
Description: Full song lyrics matched to artist + track name; NLP-derived VADER sentiment score, language, and word count
Size: ~3 million track-lyric pairs after cleaning

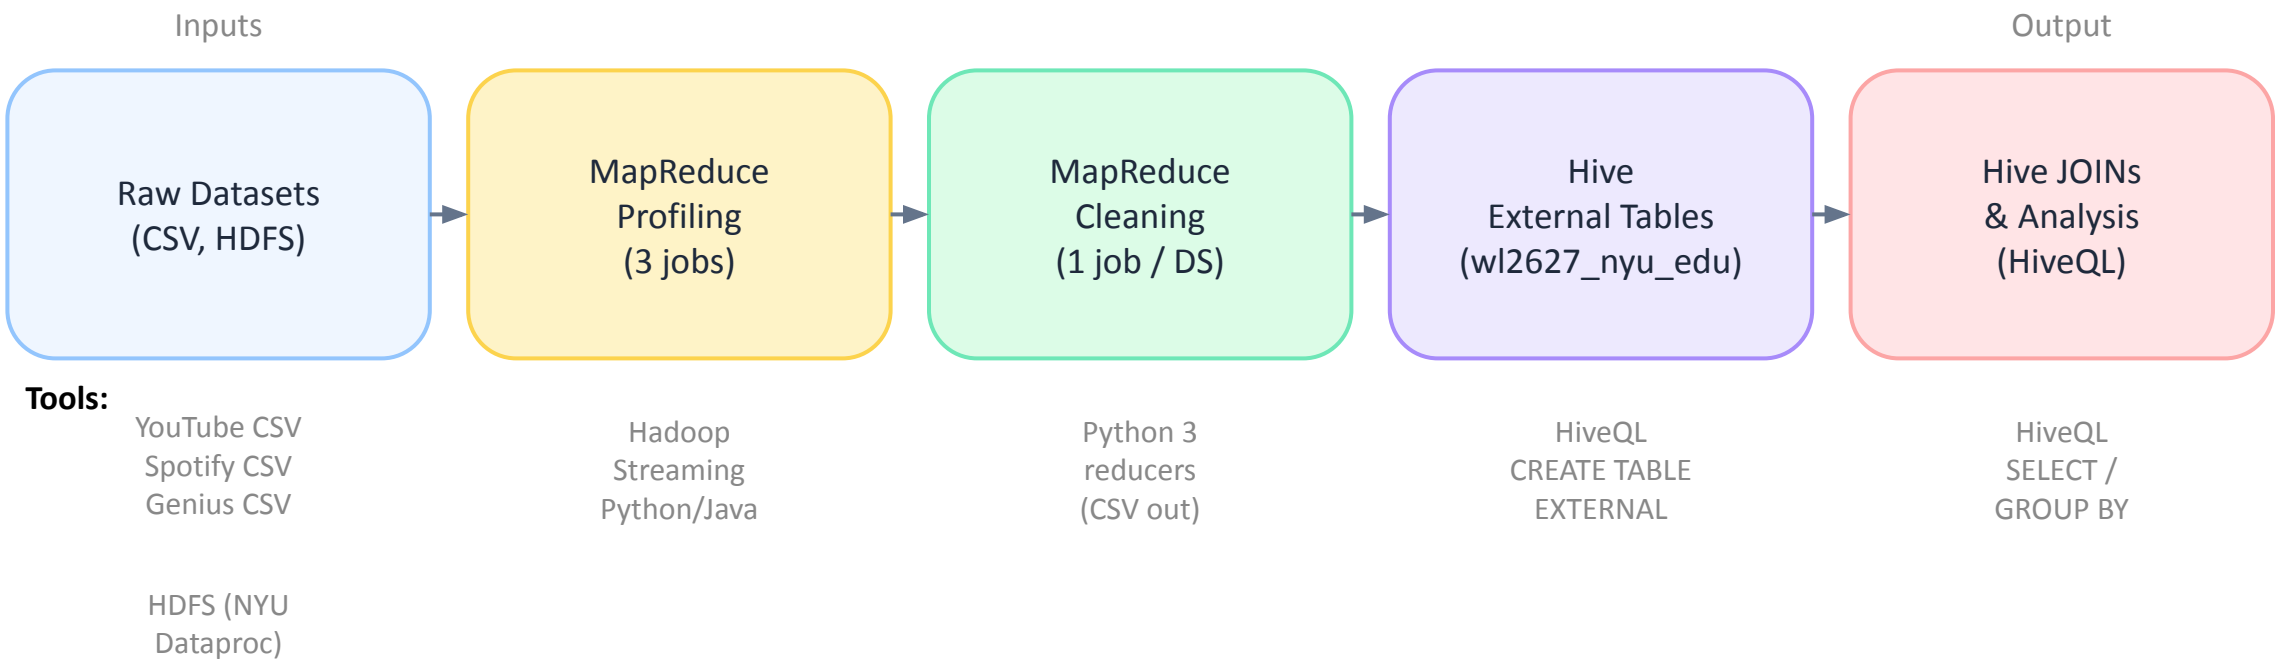
Sentiment score: VADER compound score based on text file from the vader python code. Artist + track name normalized to [a-z0-9] for JOIN.

Design Diagram



Code Challenge 1: YouTube

Profiling

- emitNumeric() - deals with numeric columns (views, likes, dislikes, and comment_count）
- emitCategorical() - deals with category columns
- parseCSVLine() - deals with csv files

Cleaning

- normalizeTrendingDate() - "18.14.11" → "2018-11-14" (yy.dd.mm → yyyy-mm-dd)
- normalizePublishTime() - "2018-11-14T17:00:00.000Z" → "2018-11-14"
- normalizeText() - " Hello World " → "hello world"

Code Challenge 2: Spotify

Challenge: Align Python cleaning to Wilson's Java normalization exactly, so Hive JOINs on artist name and track name produce correct cross-dataset matches.

Python: clean_mapper.py
def normalize_text(s):
    """Strip to [a-z0-9 ] matches Wilson's Java regex exactly."""
    s = s.strip().lower()
    s = re.sub(r"[^a-z0-9\s]", "", s)   # ← key: drop apostrophes, hyphens, etc.
    s = re.sub(r"\s+", " ", s).strip()
    return s

Java (Wilson's mapper) must produce identical output:
str.replaceAll("[^a-z0-9\\s]","").replaceAll("\\s+"," ").trim()

Semicolon-separated artists: "Ingrid Michaelson;ZAYN"
artists_out = " ".join( normalize_text(a) for a in record["artists"].split(";") if a.strip()
Result: "ingrid michaelson zayn"  (space-joined, semicolons gone)
```

Without this alignment, Hive JOINs would silently produce 0 matched rows.

Code Challenge 3: Lyrics

Challenge: Getting the sentiment scores for 3 million+ songs lyric within a MapReduce without any python code required having the lexicon as a static resource and running in a Java alternative code.

@Override
protected void setup(Context context) throws IOException {
    lexicon = new HashMap<>();
    InputStream is = LyricCleanMapper.class
            .getResourceAsStream("/vader_lexicon.txt");
    if (is == null) {
        System.out.println("Lex File not found");
        return;
    }
    BufferedReader br = new BufferedReader(new InputStreamReader(is));
    String line;
    while ((line = br.readLine()) != null) {
        line = line.trim();
        if (line.isEmpty())
            continue;

        String[] p = line.split("\\s+");

        try {
            String word = p[0].toLowerCase();
            double score = Double.parseDouble(p[1]);
            lexicon.put(word, score);
        } catch (Exception ignored) {
        }
    }

    br.close();

Lexicon loaded once per JVM task (static initializer) to avoid I/O overhead across 50K rows.

Results

1. Genre is the strongest predictor of trending count.
   Cantopop, mandopop, and romance genres account for the top trending YouTube music videos by count. However, hard rock and french genre has fewer video but show higher average views.

2. Danceability and energy positively correlate with YouTube views.
   Tracks with higher danceability and energy have more views on Youtube.

3. How does lyric sentiment affect song views?
   Neutral sentiment with low valence dominates trending video count and views, while positive sentiment with high or low valence shows fewer videos and lower views.

Obstacles

1. Cross-language normalization mismatch.
   The regex in python kept apostrophes and hyphens, Wilson's Java stripped them. JOIN has 0 matched rows result. Fix: make the regex both to [^a-z0-9\s] making sure all the regex is similar across all three member pipelines.

2. Semicolon-separated artist names in Spotify.
   "Ingrid Michaelson;ZAYN" is a single string in the CSV. For getting all the artists, this string doesn’t provide that, so we need to normalize it and make it return as two. Fix: split on ";" first, normalize each artist individually, then rejoin with a space.

3. All csv data types
   Our data have an extra comma (,) causing our cleaning result to fail to be correctly added to the tables when we did a split with “,”. Fix: we separated it using `\t` tabs which doesn’t appear normally

Summary

We built a fully distributed end-to-end Big Data pipeline on NYU Dataproc to answer: what makes a music video trend on YouTube?

- Three datasets which includes YouTube (40K videos), Spotify (78K tracks), Genius lyrics (3M lyrics) were profiled, cleaned, and normalized using Hadoop Streaming MapReduce.

- Careful cross-team normalization alignment (Python ↔ Java regex) ensures Hive JOINs produce accurate three-way matched records.

- Three HiveQL queries reveal that genre, danceability and lyrical sentiment all have measurable effects on YouTube trending success.
